Abstract

Turkey has an important position in terms of immigration culture tradition. Since the 15th century, it has created a state tradition by producing policies on immigration. While it was a state that received immigration until the Republican Period, after 1960, it started to give migration to the labor force. According to immigration theories, the causes of migration fluctuations in the world are being investigated first, focus will be on Turkish immigration policies from Ottoman to today. Turkey frame of the major factors that lead to migration will be opened to discussion.

In the study, firstly the causes of migration fluctuations in the world will be investigated according to immigration theories. Then, from the Ottoman Empire in Turkey will focus on today's immigration policies. Turkey framework of the principal factors that led to the migration will be opened to discussion. The aim here is to compare emigration and immigration processes.

In this context, the neo-liberal developments will be subject to review in the light of the developments in Turkey's migration to reflex. Among the world's nations tried to determine differences in Turkey's immigration policy, and the contributions of new policies applied to world peace will be examined. Radically reducing the causes of immigration is one of the main goals of the United Nations. In reaching these goals, whether or not creating an original model of Turkey's approach is a very important situation. As an Important state in the international scene, Turkey place a strategically significant role in the region with respect to its historical and cultural heritage. In the same way migration is a critically issue in this region and Turkey has an important role in it. Moving from this perspective, we will first analyze the immigration trafficking of the country from the east to the present, in the second stage, statistics of the recent integration studies will be subjected to descriptive analysis. In the last stage, social, economic, political and cultural consequences of migrations will be tried to reach.

1. Introduction

Migration is defined as "a significant distance and all changes that take place within a period of time to effect" (Erder, 1986, s.9). These shifting material and spiritual items that started with the history of mankind have led to different cultural interactions. So much so that everything that has been learned on behalf of humanity from immigrant diseases to the treatment of these diseases has been moved to the world by immigration (Yılmaz, 2014, s.3).

Migration is forced or voluntary migration according to the reasons; work or asylum-seeking migration according to their purposes; it is possible to define them according to different criteria as legal or illegal migrations according to the methods used to reach the target. On the other hand, the name "irregular / not regulated migration", which includes transit, shuttle and asylum-seeker migrations, where the social, demographic and economic characteristics of the immigrant population can change very quickly, it is given. Transit migration, one of the irregular migratory species, is intended to temporarily stay in another country while going to the country where it is desired to be reached; while shuttle migration is a cycle of returning to a country for a certain period of time and returning after a while (Yılmaz, 2014:4-6). In this case, asylum seekers appear to be "persons who wish to be recognized as refugees in a country within the framework of relevant national or international documents and who are awaiting the outcome of their application for a refugee status" (Adıgüzel, 2017, s.5).

Though the definitions formed on the phenomenon of migration differ according to certain conditions, it is in fact based on changing the geography where the individual or the community lives. International migration, which is achieved through the transnational border crossing, means passing to another country for a permanent or certain period of time. Migration, which is seen as a physical displacement at the outset, is a complex process with psychological and social dimensions. Therefore, it emerges as the population movements that change the socio-economic, cultural and political dimensions of the geographical change process and the society structure (Göksu, 2017).

In the historical process, it can be said that the most important feature that distinguishes the migration movements from the colonial period to the migration movements which started with colonialism is the aim of meeting the labor needs of the West. XV. With the beginning of colonialism in the 19th century, human power, the basic necessity of the West, was provided especially from Africa. So much so, "XVI. century XIX. by the beginning of the century, approximately 8-10 million Africans were brought to work in fields in the New World (American continent)" (Ref. Yılmaz, 2014, s.5).

Another migration trend in the same period was the migration of the overpopulated populations of Britain, the Netherlands, Spain, Portugal, and France, as well as the newly discovered regions and /or immigration to the colonies, along with Europe's transition to industry. "A total of 55 million Europeans from 1821 to 1924 have fallen into overseas routes and chose a new place for them, and 34 million of them preferred to settle in the United States" (Abadan-Unat, 2002, s.31).
Another migration wave is XX. It was formed after the First and Second World Wars that lived in the century. These wars have caused migrations in many parts of the world. Lost by millions of people in two great battles, the West has received the first priority from the neighboring countries for the manpower needed for reconstruction. When these were insufficient, mass migrations started from the east and south. Causes such as the inability of the underdeveloped and developing countries to provide adequate social and economic opportunities to the growing population, civil wars and regional tensions have led to European countries. However, the problems of labor shortages and aging, which began to take place in European countries, and the rigid migration policies, on the other hand, revealed the concept of irregular migration.

Developments in the area of transportation and communication that have emerged with globalization have facilitated the movement of migrants and the exchange of information. However, again in this process, the impoverishment of underdeveloped and developing countries constituted the most important factors in increasing the number of migrants. Thus, economic-political problems such as poverty or civil war seem to lead to more irregular migration today.

Migration or migration movements that are in the study area of different scientific disciplines; social, political, economic, ecological or individual reasons, which need to be examined both in terms of time, space and purpose. This process is of fundamental importance in bringing about different outcomes in the social structure. In this study, it becomes increasingly more complex, nested migration into Turkey focused subjected to analysis, the actual mass flow has been classified by the historical process. In the third phase, migration governance in the context of integration policies followed by the said historical background has been implemented by Turkey today with argumentatif examination method.

2. Turkish Immigration from Central Asia

The migration movements of the Turks have an important place in the history of the ancient and medieval times. The first homeland is in the north-western part of the Altay-Sayan mountains. B.C. From 1700 onwards they began to spread and many political formations in the geographies they dominated brought to the scene (Çandarlıoğlu, 2002, s.6).

Due to droughts, political disputes and population increase, Turks have abandoned their homeland since the early days of history and have embarked on diverse migration movements, conquered other countries and established states there (Koymen, 1993, s.3).

XI. Turkish migration from Central Asia to the west for centuries followed the steppes north of the Caspian and Black Sea and extended to the Danube Basin. The first is M.S. In 375, the Western Huns progressed to the inside of Europe. In the following centuries, the Avarians, Bulgarians, Khazars, Pechenegs, Uzlar and Kipchaks followed the same path to the Danube Basin and the Balkans. After the victory of Dandanakan (1040), 'Great Oguz Göçü' was followed towards Azerbaijan and Eastern Anatolia by following a different direction (Kafalı, 1996, ss.5-6).
The defeat of the Seljuk Sultan Alparslan in East Anatolia, Malazgirt, Byzantine Emperor Romano Diogenes in 1071 led to the conquest of Anatolia by the Turks. This incident led not only to political conquest of Anatolia but also to the land of the Turks in a fundamental way. The Turkification of Anatolia was largely the result of the Seljuk Dynasty, the Turkmen tribes and small principals who frequently rebelled the dynasty (Grousset, 2010, ss.182-187).

The Turkification of Anatolia XI. It can be said that this land began to be a century and within a few centuries it became a Turkish homeland. Even XII. Anatolia century onwards, by Westerners ‘Turkey’, he called, seen in period western sources (Yerasimos, 2006, s.22).

3. Turkish Identity in Anatolia

The Turks did not live under a common rule in any single territory, within certain boundaries, of any of their histories. The Turkish tribes, who came to the forefront with their warrior qualities, migrated to the three continents due to tribal tensions from Central Asia, the first dormitories, food shortage and population increase. The Turks, who have the tendency to establish an empire by the name of Jean-Paul Roux, have some basic characteristics of the political formations they have established in the region (Roux, 2007, ss.30-31).

The Turkish empires, which were folk mosaics, were able to live together in harmony with the peoples they possessed. It allowed them to maintain their identity, language, culture and religion under a centralized government. In fact, they have "lived an extraordinarily bright period for the peoples under their sovereignty" (Roux, 2007, ss.42).

According to Baykan Sezer, who believes that Turkish history can be examined in two parts as Central Asian Turkish History and Anatolian Turkish History, Central Asian Turkish societies are nomadic societies. However, although the Turks have changed their civilization in Anatolia, they have been able to maintain their identities and maintain continuity (Sezer, 1979, ss.121-127).
Islam has brought Arabization together with all the geographies it shows in the Near East. The fact that the countries of Near East and North Africa today are called Arab countries point to this. However, in the Near East it can be said of two countries that are out of this rule. The first one is Iran, the second is the Turks settled in Anatolia. These countries and the peoples living on them were able to protect their identity despite Islamization (Sezer, 2011, ss.134-135). The Turks who came to Anatolia in the Near East did not have an opportunity to change their identities (Sezer, 1979, ss.131).

In fact, the capture of Anatolia by the Turks was never intended. However, after the Battle of Malazgirt, the relation of Turks with Anatolia changed and Anatolia started to Turkize completely after that date (Sezer, 1979, ss.131). Some qualities of Anatolian geography also led Turks to protect their identities and to remain in the Islamic world. The realization of the Turkification of Anatolia was found in Ottoman Empire. Just as the Ottomanism is a result of the Turkification of Anatolia, the Turkification of Anatolia event also found its true meaning in Ottomanism (Sezer, 1979, ss.133). The forced immigration situation in a sense led to a result in the interests of the Turks so that the Turks, for the first time in their history, It has become possible to build a permanent civilization by protecting its own selves outside Asia.

4. Migration Waves in the Ottoman State

Although Anatolia is home to different religions and nations in the history of the world, it has been seen as a bridge between the continents. Today Turkey and the formation of the formation of the building blocks of the 19th century experienced since the second half and causing large-scale migration of ethnic change Anatolia waves have played an important role.

Throughout history, Anatolia has had strategic defense routes, both climate and geopolitical. Therefore, it has become a center of attraction due to its economic, social and cultural identity.Incoming waves of mass migration, social Ottoman Empire and later the Republic of Turkey, has been greatly influenced by ethnic and cultural structure.

The migration waves that started with the Crimean Tatars in the 1850s followed by the Caucasus peoples such as the Dagestanians, Chechens and Lazs, especially Georgian and Circassians (www.goc.gov.tr).

Among these regions is the Crimean Tatar Migrations, the first large-scale Muslim migration to the Ottoman lands. In the pre-1783 period, the Crimean Tatars had migrated in small groups to the Ottoman lands. However, the first major migration in the size of the wave occurred in 1783 when Tsarist Russia captured the Crimea. In the subsequent Tatar immigrations until 1890 Ottoman - Russian wars were decisive.

Circassian immigration is at least as massive as immigration, which has as dramatic consequences as the migration of the Crimean Tatars and affects the demographic structure of Anatolia. Intermittently, about 2.5 million Circassians had to migrate until the First World War. However, a large part of these immigrants - about 1 million people - lost their lives during migration.
Since the beginning of the 19th century, a large number of immigrants have come from Azerbaijan. Especially during 1877-1878 immigration seems to be intensified. In addition, only about 10,000 people migrated to Anatolia only during the First World War (Bilgin, 2006). Another migration wave over one million is ‘Georgian’ migrations. The Georgian immigrations, which first started after the Ottoman - Russian war of 1828 - 1829, continued until 1921.

For the first time Turkey Fatih Sultan Mehmet brought Albanians, they were placed in the year 1468 in the districts of Istanbul Arnavutkoy. Arnavutköy was founded by Albanian immigrants in 1468. The Albanians, who we named as the main stones of our culture, the symbols (Arnavutköy, Albanian), our meals (Albanian cold) and the personality traits (Albanian recollection), began their migration to Anatolia with the passing of the Albanian land they lived to the Ottoman State administration. The Albanians constitute the most ethnic group of the Ottoman State administrative authorities. 35 of the 215 people who were brought to the Grand Vizier position in the Ottoman State were Albanian (Bakay, 2007).

While examining migrations to Anatolia, it is necessary to mention Polonezköy, which emigrated to the Ottoman lands in the 19th century by the Polonians and which emerged as a result of this migration. After the Polish Kingdom joined the Russian territory in 1830, in early 1831, 10,000 people emigrated from Poland, which constituted the intellectual part of the country. Some of the migrating Poles came to the Ottoman lands.

The wars in the first Arab-born migrations were important. After the expeditions of Islam and the subsequent campaigns with the Ottoman Empire, many Arabs stayed in Anatolia, not returning to their countries. Tarsus, the reason for the arrival of Arabian Alevis in Adana region to Anatolia is to be subjected to pressure in their countries. The main reason for the settlement of Arab families outside Anatolia to these reasons is trade in general. The last wave of Arab migration occurred in the last period of the Ottoman Empire. The Arab revolt led by Sharif Hussein was suppressed in 1916 when the Western-backed Arab nationalism movement in the Syrian territory gained an increasingly radical dimension before World War I. Syrian, Hijaz and Mesopotamian regions, the Arab population approaching to about 5 thousand families were transferred to the inner and western Anatolian regions.

After invading Austro-Hungarian Empire until 1918 Bosnia from Bosnia to Turkey have been four major waves of migration. The first major immigration was just after the Austro-Hungarian Empire invaded Bosnia in 1878. The second migration occurred in 1882. The third wave of migration has been in 1900, with the movement ‘Dzabic’. The fourth wave occurred in 1908.

Among the migrations to the Ottoman Empire, there are many Jews. Among the Jews from the Crimea were the Crimean chakra (Rabbinic Jews speaking in the Turkic language) and Karays. Mountainous Jews (Tatlar) and Georgian Jews came from the Caucasus. Balkan Jewish immigrants were largely made up of Sephardic Jews. (The Northern Mediterranean Jews, known as Sephardic Jews, were expelled from Spain and Portugal in the late 15th century.) But Romaniots and Eskenazis were among them. Among the immigrants there were Yemeni, Buharian and Indian Jews who found the way to Ottoman lands (Karpat, 2010).

In Table 1 below, the chiefs of the mass and individual asylum movements took place during the Ottoman Empire period, which tolerated the arrivals without discrimination of religion and race.

5. Republican Movement of Migration

Although migrations to Anatolia were not as intense as those of the late Ottoman emigrants, they continued in the Republican period. Turkey is considered as a region experiencing significant civilization. It is known that such immigrants and states established on the synthesis of civilizations have taken various measures and produced solutions for the social, political and administrative problems that migrated.

Migration fluctuations continued after the Republican period. The most important and the first migration movement of the Republican era was realized with the Turkish-Greek barter in 1923. This migration movement has been mutually realized as it is understood from the name of the agreement. It is known that between 1922 and 1938, 384 thousand people from Greece came.
Mass migration from Yugoslavia from Macedonia to Turkey is another important immigration movements. Turks living in Macedonia, the Republic of Turkey influx of first migration took place in 1924. This was followed by the second wave of migration in 1936. In all these immigration waves, the policies followed by the governments in these lands and the pressures applied to the Turks have been influential. Tito’s visit to Turkey was signed in 1953 by the ‘Free Immigration Agreement’ with, third migration from Macedonia to Turkey began glut (Bozkurt, 2010, ss.51-95).

During the Republican era, from Yugoslavia to Turkey, a total of 77 431 families 305 158 people have emigrated. Of these families, 14,494 people were enrolled by the state until 1950. The other part of the family, settled in Turkey as free immigrants (KHGM Implementation Report, 1996).

Migrations from Bulgaria are also important in terms of including the mass migration movement. One of the major migration waves that took place in Anatolia during the Republican period was the migration movements from Bulgaria. Immigration from Bulgaria continued until 1989 at intervals. Migrations from Bulgaria, which reached about 800 thousand people during this period, took place in four stages (Doğanay, 1997):

- Turkey in 1925 - Bulgarian residence contract until 1949 with 218 998 people have emigrated to Turkey. In 1946, after the proclamation of the People’s Republic of Bulgaria, during the period 1949 to 1951 the total number of immigrants from Bulgaria to Turkey was 156 063. 1968 - 1979 between the ‘Turkey-Bulgaria Close Relatives Immigration Agreement’ within the framework of 116 521 people have emigrated to Turkey. The last migration of Muslims from Bulgaria Bulgarian citizens of Turkish origin in 1989, was initiated by the Bulgarian government by forcing them to migrate to Turkey. 79 287 people from Romania in 1923 - in 49 years as immigrants have arrived in Turkey. In addition, 43,271 people from 11,280 families came as immigrants and settled in places where their previous relatives had settled. Between 1923 and 1945, 800 thousand people were displaced from the Balkans. Founded in 1950, the Republic of East Turkistan was occupied by China, it has been the cause of migration to Turkey from East Turkestan.
together with the Second World War, the new home of some people in eastern Turkey was the Legion. During the Second World War, Eastern legions were legions of eastern peoples who fought in the ranks of Nazi Germany. These legions were formed by Muslim peoples including Uzbeks, Kazaks, Kyrgyz, Turkmen, Karakalpaks, Balkars, Karachays, Azeris, Daghestans, Ingushes, Chechens.

After the Islamic Revolution in Iran occurred in 1979, nearly a million people have migrated to Turkey from Iran. Azerbaijan is the majority in terms of ethnic origins. Persian and Kurdish origins are also included.

The Soviet-Afghan war has an important role in the formation of Afghan emigration, which took place at the beginning of the 1980s. In 1982, after the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan because of the war started, he came to Turkey in the region, many of Turkish origin. Among the arrivals are Uzbeks, Uighurs, Kazakhs and Kyrgyz.

In history from Syria, other than the individual escape, 1945, 1951, 1953 and 1967 it took place in the exodus to Turkey. These immigrants whose numbers are not known are located in Kırıkhan, İskenderun and Adana.

A large part of the migrants from Iraq occurred after the massacre of Halabja in 1988 in Northern Iraq and found 51,542 people. After the Gulf War in 1991, 467 489 people came to Turkey to escape. 20 thousand people from Bosnia between 1992-1998, after the events that occurred in Kosovo in 1999, 17 746 people, 10,500 people from Macedonia in 2001, April 2011-May 2017 among more than three million people in Turkey due to internal turmoil in Syria is expected to come to.

In the Republican era, Anatolia was not in the Balkan countries, especially in families that migrated from countries that were Muslim or belonged to the Turkish Language group. For example, 2,194 inhabitants of Turkestan were resettled, 684 as free immigrants; 4,163 inhabitants from Afghanistan came as immigrants. They are located in rural and urban areas, especially in Central Anatolia, Eastern and Southeastern Anatolia (KHGM Implementation Report, 1996, ss.140).

In the last two hundred years of history of Anatolia, close to 6 million immigrants, is located within the borders of present-day Republic of Turkey. Nearly half of the immigrants were resettled with state facilities and employed. The other half is usually located close to their previous friends and relatives. Immigrants and interaction between locals and migrants compliance issues, and even residential areas and forms of issues, limited facilities with year on year in both foreign policy should also domestic policy Turkey has been an important agenda.

The most prominent figures of the mass migration movements that continued during the foundation period of the Republic and afterwards are shown in Table 2.
From 1922 until today, Turkey is understood that the host of more than 5 million people. This number does not include strangers who come for purposes such as study and education. work in Turkey, when we look at the figures for education and other purposes to foreigners who have come in, more than 2 million foreigners last 10 years seems to get a residence permit. (www.goc.gov.tr)

6. Turkey’s Migration Governance On the Framework of Integration Policies

Migration is a social thing at the beginning of everything. (1) Today, governments are focusing more on “security” in terms of immigration. However, as Hollifield notes, policies on international migration need to be examined in three dimensions (2000, ss.137-8).

- Control,
- International relations (sovereignty, national security and the relationship between foreign policy and international migration) and
- Immigrants’ adaptation (immigration impact on citizenship and political development).

Therefore, while discussing international migration issues, policy development for only one of these dimensions is not sufficient for a solution.

The institutional structure of the immigration administration is firstly the Council of Ministers. And the Council of Ministers, the determination of migration policies; removal of laws; the creation and implementation of government programs and development plans; followed by the application is in charge of issues such as and supervision. (Demirhan and Aslan, 2015, ss.46-7) Turkey’s migration governance, pre-2013 and post-2013 should be dealt with developments in the framework of 6458 numbered Foreigners and International Protection Act. At the same time, Turkey’s participation in international cooperation, for which it forms a framework of other migration governance needs to be examined.

Migration movements in Turkey before 2013 are organized in various legislation. These studies, which started in 1950, continued in this perspective until 2003. In this process, Turkey, arrangements for the migration in the table below, were implemented.

On migration management in Turkey it is difficult enough to mention institutionalized (Mengü, 2015) until 2013. In the period before 2013, the Foreigners Branch of the General Directorate of Security of the Ministry of the Interior and the Governorships concentrated on controlling illegal immigrants entering the country. For this reason, the necessity of an institutional structure has emerged for immigration management under the harmonization with the EU acquis.(Demirhan ve Aslan, 2015, s.46)
In this context, the model of Turkey’s migration governance formed as described in Figure 1 above. All of the units that constitute the model are handled one by one in the frame of their functions, and the expansion of the model is provided.

6.1. Migration Working Group

Turkey in 2002, to perform asylum regulations related to immigration, Preservation Task Force of External Borders and Immigration, Migration Working Group has been established. Migration Working Group, sub-units were designated as General Staff, Foreign Ministry, Undersecretariat of Customs, General Directorate of Security, General Command of Gendarmerie, Coast Guard Command, and institutional structuring of migration governance was provided (www.goc.gov.tr/2018).

6.2. Related to the Adoption of the European Union Acquis in the Field of Asylum and Migration Turkey’s National Action Plan

Immigration and international protection (asylum) issues are important in the context of the “24 chapters” titled "Justice, Freedom and Security” in negotiations by the European Union. In this context, "for the Adoption of the EU Acquis 2003 National Program of Turkey" prepared in accordance with the Asylum and the Immigration area for the Adoption of the EU Acquis Turkey’s National Action Plan (Asylum and Migration Action Plan) was put into effect after approval at March 25, 2005 by the Prime Minister.
6.3. Immigration and Asylum Office

The Ministry of Interior has established the 'Bureau for the Development and Implementation of the Asylum and Migration Legislation and Administrative Capacity', which is referred to as the 'Immigration and Asylum Bureau' on 15 October 2008, in order to carry out the legal work of the Ministry of Interior. The Office has undertaken the task of ensuring that the required legal and institutional structure is in accordance with the EU acquis and that the necessary strategy documents, national action plans, projects are fulfilled and that the Ministry of Internal Affairs is informed (Ekşi, 2014, ss.9-10).

6.4. Foreigners and International Protection Act

By date 04/11/2013 and numbered 28615 published in the Official Gazette No. 6458 Law on Foreigners and International Protection, arrangements are made in cases foreigners in Turkey as a result of legal and illegal migration. In this respect, it is aimed to prevent human rights violations in terms of immigrants and to bring the problems that may arise in the public, political and economic aspects of our country to a minimum level. With the law, international protection has been extensively scrutinized for the first time and international protection, which is perceived as hospitality, is now considered in the context of 'rights' (Özer, 2011, s.76).

In 2013, in the institutional structuring of migration governance, the Law on Foreigners and International Protection No. 6458 has entered into force. In our era of migration, taking into account Turkey's host country, in order to better manage the migration foresees radical changes, transparent and participatory legal reform work was carried out. Considering the inevitability of migration, efforts have been made to adopt a human-focused approach respecting the rights of all immigrants, especially in vulnerable groups (2). As a result of this study, a migration management structure in Turkey with a holistic approach that forms the basis for the establishment Foreigners and International Protection Law No. 6458 was adopted.

The main issues regulated by the law are: Visa and Residence Permits; Work Permits; International Students; Stateless Persons; Victims of Human Trafficking; Administrative Supervision and Borderless; Non-refoulement; Exemption from Residence Permit in International Protection; Status Determination in International Protection Procedures; Types of International Protection; Unaccompanied Minors and Special Needs Owners; Acceptance, Reception and Rescue Centers; Harmony; Temporary Protection; Migration Policy Board for Institutional Structure.

The law allows foreigners and persons with international protection applications and status to work for mutual harmony with the society. While adapting the adaptation strategies, an immigrant-focused approach with multilateral and two-way active interaction has been adopted. Compliance activities include the following contents (www.goc.gov.tr/Migration History Report):
To conduct activities that will facilitate the reciprocal harmonization of the applicant with the foreigner and those with international protection status in the country,

Gaining the knowledge and skills to facilitate independent action in all spheres of social life in the countries of our country, in the countries where they are resettled or when they return, through third parties,

For foreigners; to organize courses on the basis of the political structure, language, legal system, culture and history of the country and its rights and obligations,

To conduct publicity and information activities with the use of public and private goods and services, access to education and economic activities, social and cultural communication, basic health care services, distance education and similar systems,

For this purpose, housing needs of the Ahiska Turks have been met in İğdır, İzmir and Bursa.(www.toki.gov.tr) The Housing Development Administration continues to be beside immigrants who are in need of housing.

7. Results and Suggestions

Since the Second World War, international migrations have become increasingly complex and multidimensional. The most important determinants of this are in addition to the economic factors such as inequality in income distribution due to labor market, wage differentials, weakness of employment opportunities, globalization of market economy; sociological factors such as the process of identity inquiry, the desire to obtain a better standard of living, the desire for respect in the society, the life in a low stress environment and the struggle to move away from the complexity.
According to the United Nations Migration Report 2015, the number of international migrants worldwide is increasing day by day. The number of immigrants, from 173 million in 2000, reached 222 million in 2010 and 244 million in 2015. According to the figures of the International Organization for Migration, one of every seven people today is immigrant with internal migrations. According to the High Commissioner of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in 2016, the number of displaced people in the world reached 65.6 million. This number represents the highest value since the Second World War.

In Turkey, the Middle East and Asia to the east and with some countries experiencing conflict and instability south, west welfare and human rights standards is the highest bridge between European countries. The Middle East and particularly the conflict in neighboring countries, the presence of political and economic instability, it is difficult mountainous and control of the eastern border, for reasons such as compliance with the illegal crossing of the geographical structure of the Aegean and Mediterranean coasts, Turkey, the European Union (EU) route crossing for migrants aiming to go to their country state. Especially in recent years with the growing economic and regional power, Turkey has become a center of attraction for regular and irregular migration movements. Considering all these factors, migration, Turkey’s economic, socio-cultural and demographic structure, deeply affect the public order and security.

Turkey’s most institutionalized efforts entry as refugees in migration management in recent years as the host country in the world is very important. International cooperation activities related to migration governance are also being carried out in bilateral, multilateral and regional dimensions. Particularly irregular migration movements, human trafficking and migrant smuggling are being carried out. However, it can be said that international cooperation in combating trafficking in human beings and smuggling of migrants is not enough.

Turkey due to the war in Syria, which borders in recent years has been faced with a serious wave of immigration. Since the Syrian crisis that began in 2011, the world public has remained insensitive to the 'open-door policy' and has hosted the Syrians under the Temporary Protection Status. As of today, three million Syrian refugees in Turkey, there are about two and a half million other foreign residence permit area. The fact that such a busy immigrant lives within the borders of the country also causes many problems. In this context, there has been such intense migration; effective public policies in the field of migration management must be identified and implemented.

Prior to 2013, only to realize the management of migration in Turkey, to set an agenda in this area and putting into practice and it was quite difficult to detect and public policy related to the existence of institutional structures that perform the audit of these policies. However, in 2013, the establishment of the General Directorate of Immigration in accordance with the Foreigners and International Protection Law No. 6458 constituted a very important step towards the remedy of the shortfall in this area. Directorate to implement policies and strategies related to immigration, institutions related to these issues and organizations in providing coordination, entry into Turkey by foreigners and stay in Turkey, outputs and deportation from Turkey, international protection, on the protection of temporary protection and victims of human trafficking and to carry out business operations in Turkey, provincial and district levels established organizational structure, return on-site centers, reception and accommodation centers and shelters for human trafficking began to be established. The most important task of the Directorate, in accordance with the regulations contained in national and international law, creating Turkey’s migration management, determine immigration policies.

Human mobility, like better living conditions, is a matter of human security as well as security for states. The General Directorate of Immigration is striving to best manage the current human mobility and to introduce a new immigration management system in accordance with the national and international law.

In order to adapt to the place of more healthy and fast, to reduce biased perspectives to foreign citizens in Turkey to try to ensure the development of a culture of living together should be among the priority targets. Institutionalization of existing channels for employment of immigrants and even families is of great importance. In addition, it is necessary to make publicity about how and by what means foreigners’ right to apply for legal remedies when necessary.

In this context, the prior steps to be taken by the Migration Policy Board, as outlined in the Foreigners and International Protection Law No. 6458, can be determined as follows: Determination of the role of local governments on international migration and refugees, becoming more effective units for migration, ensuring effective division of labor and coordination between central and local governments in service production for target groups, etc. Regulations for the development of the role of local governments on international migration can be listed under three main headings. These; regulations on urban planning within the physical settlements of local governments, regulations on the local socio-cultural structure and arrangements for an effective local government structure.

As a result, immigration should not be seen as a problem. What is important here is to be able to identify the social consequences of immigration rather than the migration of a certain number of people. This necessitates the existence of the right communication channels in order to enable integration in individual and state relations. It is important to emphasize the sustainability of social policies that will strengthen their education, health, social security and social solidarity with immigrants and can mobilize the social acceptance mechanism.

With the action of immigration, the encounter of different cultures becomes a subject and the desire of people to keep their lives together is realized together with the process of adaptation. However, sometimes this process can reach to the level of incompatibility and conflict, and communication disconnection between cultures can occur. The ways to overcome these barriers are one of the priorities of many migrated countries. In this direction, problems of universal dimension can be solved in a healthy manner by coping with differences and overcoming communication obstacles. Of course, it is very important that immigration policies are created and put into effect. However, due to the fact that the phenomenon of migration is a multidimensional and global problem, it has become a necessity to set policies at international level together with other countries which are also target countries at the same time.
In terms of the above arrangements can performed today, it is important to increase the number of Migration Research Center, established in the bodies of certain universities in Turkey. Research conducted at these centers should target the creation of a multi-stakeholder immigration administration through universities, NGOs, central government and local governments. At the same time, it should contribute to the demonstration of the applications necessary for the healthier functioning of this governance process.

1. The integration (Barrey model) is one of the cultural interaction strategies and reveals the integration of the individual as a strategy, maintaining the identity and worthiness of the individual and maintaining the relations with society, the intersection point of being valued. There are dimensions such as psychological, sociological, socio-cultural, psychological sociocultural or economic dimensions to the integration. However, the literature does not offer much about the intermediate dimension, such as the socio-psychological dimension. It is possible to explain the socio-psychological dimension by following the similar works in the literature and by the theory of identity. As the theory of social identity states, individuals develop various identities in relation to groups they feel they belong to, in fact, depending on their relationship with their social environment. Here, for example, an individual's nationality, political tendency, even the sports club he holds can become dimensions that are articulated to one’s social identity. Therefore, it is possible to explain the immigration with the theory of social identity. 2. In order to ensure integration and harmony in the society, it is important to make the whole gathering common to the basic situations in which general assembly is provided. Equalization of public benefits for all groups in society, such as health, education, marriage, and occupation; language competencies, sufficient knowledge of cultural knowledge; In the same way, the need for security and stability is required for all groups. There are nine key issues that affect compliance. Integration should be assessed within the framework of the state's policy, willingness, employment, education, home, health, marriage, social acceptance, participation, legal integration and rights.
