INTRODUCTION

AT THE PRESENT TIME the significance referred to human factor is increasing progressively with regard to all sectors and human resources are accepted as the most valuable capital for businesses (Bingöl, 1990: 1; Tütüncü et al., 2003: 114). Having an efficient labor force is a significant component that makes today's businesses competitive (Erdem et al., 2014: 90). Especially, competition in the tourism sector which is built upon service concentrates on the human resources that produces the service (Akova et al., 2007: 276). In this respect, workforce in the tourism businesses is considered the most important source in achieving organizational effectiveness. Due to the labor-intensive nature of tourism enterprises, employees play a key role and expected to carry some special qualifications (Mullins, 1995: 8; Kozak and Güçlü, 2008: 40; Erden and Gezen, 2014: 20). Quality of the employee will directly affect especially the quality of the service and the level of satisfaction (Akova et al., 2007: 276).

Due to the nature of tourism enterprises, working long hours, low wages, limited social benefits, seasonal work may emerge, so turnover rate in tourism sector is usually higher than other types of businesses (Pelit and Kılıç, 2012: 126). In addition to the effects of the factors on the turnover rate listed above, improper practices that enterprises have done in the process of finding human resources thought to be an important part of the problem. Failure to establish favorable conditions to find the personnel with appropriate skills and qualifications required for the job weakens the tourism businesses in terms of competitiveness. Businesses are seeking various ways to find a solution to this problem (Erden and Gezen, 2014: 21).

While selecting people to be recruited, both the employee's and jobs characteristics must be taken into consideration. People should be placed in the most suitable jobs for their own personal traits and skills (Palmer and Winters, 1993: 76). The important thing in the recruitment process is to harmonize compatibility between qualifications and abilities of the employee and qualifications and skills for the job. The fact that staff have the skills required for the job is significant for businesses to survive successfully, achieve efficiency in operations, development and to grow (Tütüncü et al., 2003: 115).

A selection criteria is needed for the selection of the staff to be recruited. The selection criteria represents which characteristics will be used in the selection (Koçel, 2013: 100). The criteria used in the selection process is generally divided into three categories: education, work experience or professional experience and work-related personal characteristics. The criteria determined in education must reflect required level of education to succeed. The work related experience of candidate generally shows his success. Organizations normally prefers the personnel who have experience in a similar job. Such an experienced staff will need less training to perform his/her job. Work-related personal characteristics may include additional point of interest that contribute to knowledge and skills used by the staff when doing his job (Palmer and Winters, 1993: 77).

Nowadays businesses have to adapt to the rapid changes occurring in the social, economic and technologic sphere and make accurate decisions to survive in the intense competitive environment. Beyond its role in our daily lives, the fact that internet is starting to hold an important place in the professional life has led to expansion of its usage areas. It has led to born many websites and online applications that bring together individuals who are seeking job and employers. They are used in the process of finding a job by jobseekers and also used in the process of recruitment and staff selection by enterprises (Özdemir et al., 2015: 121-123). For example, job advertisements on the internet in recent years considerably enable for businesses to reach more candidates and attract the most suitable ones (Erden and Gezen, 2014: 21). At the same time job advertisements on the internet considerably help the jobseekers who look for a job suitable with their career goals, abilities and interest in the process of job seeking. Because of seeking a job should be done planned and at the same time it is a time-consuming work, online job advertisements play a role in increasing the chance of finding a job that the person will be successful.

Seeking a job is an important and complicated process for individuals who wants to reach career goals, improve themselves or change the present job to work in better conditions. Job advertisements is as a business proposal in this process. Analyzing the job advertisements is an important issue for candidate who wants to prepare himself for the present job opportunities to be the ideal person for that job. The job advertisement analysis is the process of dividing the whole into pieces and examining as in other analytical methods. While making job advertisement analysis, it must be reveal the pieces that took part in the whole. These pieces are business, job and job characteristics and it is similar in nearly all job advertisements. It is needed to pay attention to the objective and subjective criteria while analyzing of job advertisement. Objective criteria reflect a reality and an opinion from an independent phenomenon. For example having a diploma, certification, knowing a language etc. Subjective criteria can be evaluated differently by different individuals. It is arguable and based on the basis of individual perception. Such as being neat, prone to teamwork, a good experience in a particular issue etc. (Gökkaya et al., 2015: 26-29).

Analysis of the job advertisement is an important provision of appropriate application, improving himself to reach career goals, self-realization and responding to the call of business correctly. Interrogation of the criteria laid as a result of job analysis, knowing what the objective elements (obligatory) are, what the subjective ones (recoverable) and what the preferential elements will help to individuals who wish to apply for jobs. In conclusion individual find chance to compare the elements with respect to work. Ultimately, individuals seeking job can make a holistic assessment by comparing himself with the desired profile for the position (Gökkaya et al., 2015: 32). Accordingly, if there is harmony between qualifications and skills required for the job and their own qualities and skills, the jobseeker can apply or if not, he tries to adapt or makes a bid for.

When viewed from the general framework, the subjects of job advertisement, job analysis, and compliance with the job advertisement which can be evaluated as the result of the job analysis have been taken as the first aim in this study. Thus, content of online job advertisements of hotel enterprises have been examined. The type of hotel enterprise, information about the position, and general qualifications required to be a candidate in the top and middle level managers have been determined. The manager selection criteria of the hotel businesses have been revealed by making inferences from the results obtained. The target audience of the study are mainly those individuals who seek the path to be followed to achieve their career goals, individuals who wish to continue their professional lifes as managers and employees who are looking for a job to work in better conditions.

METHOD

This research is a qualitative study. Firstly, written literature review about personnel selection criteria was conducted for the study. As a result of general literature review, it has seen that these criteria are divided into three. These criteria are education, experience in the job or profession and personal characteristics related to job which are required for employees. In this classification context; job advertisements of five star, four star and other hotels (boutique hotels and hotels whose company information is confidential) published on four online web sites which involves job advertisements mostly related to hospitality sector have been examined. The advertisements of executive managers and mid-level managers have been examined in detail and it has been presented in section of findings. Except these advertisements have not been subjected to investigation because of not directly related to research topic. In the study, the job advertisements which have been advertised by hotels on the given four internet websites in the first quarter of the 2016 year (January, February and March) in which the recruitment is being made the most have been took and content analysis has been conducted.

FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION

In total, 290 advertisements of senior managers and mid-level managers which form the database of the study have been examined. The advertisements of the hotels have been examined first by the type of business. The distribution according to business type of the hotels which have advertised for senior manager and mid-level manager can be seen in the Table 1.

Table 1: Distribution of the Hotels That Are Advertised According To Business Type

Hotel businesses that have advertised the most are 5 star hotels (%65,2) and other hotels (%27,6). And also, these type of hotel business consist the large part of the advertisements (%92,8). In addition to this, 69 of senior manager advertisements are for general managers (%92), 6 of them are for vice general managers (%8). If we look at the mid-level manager advertisements, while we see advertisement of Sales and Marketing Manager at most (%22,8), we see Education and Improvement manager at least (%0,94). Another criterion examined in job advertisements is gender. The classification according to gender status determined by hotels is in the table below.

Total	290	% 100

As it understood from Table 3, the hotel businesses are gender-free in the advertisements of managers (%82,1). Although there is not an important majority or difference, it can be said that male managers have more request than female managers. In addition to these data obtained, senior and mid-level manager advertisements have been examined by three classification: education, experience in the job or profession and personal characteristics related to job which are required for employees. In the frame of these classification, firstly the evaluations related to data about senior manager advertisements have been mentioned.

When we have examined the senior manager advertisements from the viewpoint of education it has seen that hotel businesses have given place predominantly undergraduate/postgraduate (%90,6) options. The condition of associate degree has took place only at the rate of %9,3. While %62,7 of the hotel businesses have given place to the condition of being tourism graduate in the advertisements, %37,3 of them have not specified any criterion of being tourism graduate. The second classification which have been handled in the job advertisements is related with the required professional competence and experience for candidate senior managers. As it is seen in the Table 5, the job advertisements which look for 6-10 years of experience (%50,7) have come forward mainly. The number of hotel businesses that prefer the manager who had 1-5 years of experience are (%33,3) considerable amount. As it seen in the Table 8, the departments which have been looked for manager the most are department of sales and marketing (%22,8), front desk (%15,8) and food and beverage (%14,9), housekeeping (%11,5). These four departments constitutes the %65,1 of the all job advertisements. The first classification which have been handled in the mid-level manager job advertisements is education status which requested for the candidate managers. The condition of associate degree has took place only at the rate of %23,7. While %54 of the hotel businesses have given place to the condition of being tourism graduate in the advertisements, %46 of them have not specified any criterion of being tourism graduate. Despite that, in one of the two job advertisement (%46,5) the condition of at least one foreign language can be seen. The rate of hotel businesses which seek mid-level manager who speaks at least two foreign languages is %26,1. CONCLUSION

Seeking a job is an important process for individuals who wants to reach career goals, improve themselves or change the present job to work in better conditions. Seeking job is an important step for the turning points of his/her life. If this step is appropriate and strong, the chance of being successful in business life will increase. It is important to know the methods of seeking a job as well as it is important to seek the proper job. The proper job means the job which suits with the professional competence, capability and interests of employees. Because of seeking a job is a time-consuming work, it should be done planned. So, firstly method of seeking job should be created. Beyond its role in our daily lives, the fact that internet is starting to hold an important place in the professional life has led to expansion of its usage areas. It has led to born many websites and online applications that bring together individuals who are seeking job and employers. Job advertisements on the internet considerably help the jobseekers who look for a job suitable with their career goals, abilities and interest in the process of job seeking. Job advertisements is as a business proposal. Analyzing the job advertisements is an important issue for candidate who wants to prepare himself for the present job opportunities to be the ideal person for that job. Interrogation of the criteria laid as a result of job analysis, knowing what are the objective elements, what are the subjective ones and what are the preferential elements will help to individuals who wish to apply for jobs. For this purpose; the data have been obtained from four online web sites which involve job advertisements mostly related to hospitality sector and analyzed. As a result of literature review, according to findings of previous studies, hotel business constitute the majority of job advertisements (Erdem and Gezen 2014; Özdemir et al. 2015). It offers a good reason for this study about selecting the hotel job advertisements as research topic. As one of the most important findings of the research it can be said that five and four star hotels are the ones which need the manager the most and the ones that have used the internet for looking for employer the most. It has been seen that the majority of the job advertisements are for mid-level managers. That means hotel businesses need mid-level manager the most. When considered in terms of business size and the number of departments it has been seen as a natural consequence of this situation. In addition it has been seen in the examined job advertisements that the much-needed departments are sales and marketing, front desk, food and beverage, and housekeeping.

It has been seen that the hotel businesses are gender-free in the job advertisements of managers as another detection. The cause of there are more male managers than female managers in the job advertisements that require gender status has been found that due to the nature of the work performed such as technic service, department of security and night manager. There is an explanation related to education in all of the job advertisements of hotel businesses under investigation. In examined job advertisements it has been seen that hotel businesses have given place predominantly undergraduate/postgraduate options (%80) for administrative level. The need for qualified personnel in the hotel business are increasing and businesses are trying to stay competitive with the qualified labor they have. In addition, it has been seen that the statements of "tourism graduation" and "graduation in the related field" have substantially taken place in the examined job advertisements. Although it is pleasing that the rate of such a criterion is high, it is believed that the job advertisements of hotel businesses should contain this requirement the more. This situation will lead the employees especially who have tourism bachelor's degree on the subject of working in the sector the more. On the other hand, it is considered that if hotel businesses touch on this criterion in the job advertisement the more, it will lead to increase the value of tourism diploma. Another remarkable finding is related to required professional qualification and experiment for candidate senior managers. The most important finding here is the work experience criteria show different distribution in each department. 1-5 years of experience are requested for more at the departments of front desk, food and beverage, housekeeping and sales and marketing. 6-10 years of experience are requested for more at the food and beverage, housekeeping and sales and marketing. It has been demanded that 11- 15 years of experience are requested for more at the human resources, sales and marketing, accounting. When the job advertisements have been investigated in terms of knowledge of foreign language, it has been seen in the majority of the job advertisements. The most important point to be noted here that the job advertisements which in the foreign language requirement is not being sought are the departments that are not in direct contact with customers. It has been seen that the required personal qualifications related to job in the majority of the job advertisements and often required for candidate managers are qualification of leadership, adapting teamwork, compliance with workhours, full competency in hospitality legislation, customer satisfaction oriented, skill of management and organization, communication skills, skill of analytical thinking, full competency in MS Office Programs and hospitality software, skills of reporting. From this point of view, it has been obtained that the candidate of managers who wish to take part in executive positions in the tourism sector should have aforementioned criteria. □
