

Two Phrygian Gods Between Phrygia and Dacia¹

Alexandru AVRAM²

Keywords: Zeus Surgastes, Zeus Sarnendenos, gods, Phrygia, Galatia, Roman Dacia.

The author discusses the cult of Zeus Syrgastes (Syrgastos) and Zeus Sarnendenos and points out that both are of Phrygian origin. For Syrgastes evidence from Old Phrygian records must be added, which proves that this god was long established and had possibly Hittite-Luwian roots. Zeus Sarnendenos seems to be more recent and his mother-country may be sought in north-east Phrygia / north-west Galatia. Both cults were brought to Roman Dacia by colonists coming from Bithynia, possibly from the area of Tios/Hadrianopolis (for Zeus Syrgastes) and Galatia, perhaps from the area of modern-day Mihalıçık (for Zeus Sarnendenos).

Anahtar Kelimeler: Zeus Surgastes, Zeus Sarnendenos, Tanrılar, Phrygia, Galatia, Dacia.

Bu makalede Zeus Syrgastes (Syrgastos) and Zeus Sarnendenos kültleri ve bu kültürlerin her iki-sinin de Frigya kökenli oldukları tartışılmaktadır. Syrgastes ile ilgili kaynaklar arasında Eski Frig kaynakları bulunmaktadır ki bu durum bize bu tanrıının kökenlerinin çok eskiye dayandığını, muhtemelen Hittit-Luvi kökenlerine sahip olduğunu göstermektedir. Zeus Sarnendenos daha genç bir tanrı olarak gözükmektedir ve anayurdu muhtemelen kuzey-doğu Frigya / kuzey-batı Galatia olabilir. Muhtemelen her iki kültür de Roma Dacia'sına bugünkü Bithynia'dan, Tios/Hadrianopolis (Zeus Syrgastes için) bölgesinden ve Galatia'dan, muhtemelen modern Mihalıçık (Zeus Sarnendenos için) civarından gelen yerleşimcilerce getirilmiştir.

1. Zeus Syrgastes

This god is known particularly through the coins struck in Tios (Tieion) bearing the legend Συργαστης or Συργαστειος (Marek 2003: 104; Marek 2010: 628; Öztürk 2013: 331-332, with numismatic references). The Graeco-Latin epigraphic evidence consists at present of three inscriptions:

1. Altar from Brixia (Italy). Roman Imperial period.

CIL V 4206 (ILS 4078); InscrIt X.5 788.

4	Dis Paternis
	Surgasteo
	Magno
	Pat(a)ro
	Q(uintus) M(ucius?) Tryphon
	u(otum) s(oluit) l(ibens) m(erito).

Note the form Surgasteus, which we can deduce from the dative Surgasteo for the epithet and from the god's apparent association with Patarus (Pataros), the local hero of Tios (if, of course, PATRO, l. 4, is to be interpreted in the sense suggested by the editors).

2. Altar from Apulum (Dacia Superior). 2nd/3rd centuries AD.

Moga – (Piso – Drimbărean 1998: 109-111, no. 1 (AE 1998: 1077; SEG 48: 984); IDR III.5 706;) Ruscu 2003: no. 12; Nemeti 2005: 368, no. 269; Carbó García 2010: 990-991, no. 280).

Cf. Nemeti 2005: 246-247; Carbó García 2010: 311, 342; Ciobanu 2012.

4	Πτολεμαῖ-
	ος εὐχὴν
	Διὶ
	Συργαστῶ

The nominative form of the epiclesis is here Συργαστος.

3. Altar from Kayaarkası (commune of Yenice), territory of Hadrianopolis (Pontus-Bithynia). End of the 2nd or beginning of the 3rd century AD.
(Laflı – Christof 2012: no. 24); Christof – Laflı 2013: 133, no. 6.

4	Ἀντίοχος
	Ἀντίοχου ἀγω-
	νοθετήσας
	ἀγῶνα τὸν Συρ-
	γάστιον ἐπὶ τῶν
	δεκαπρώτων
	ἐτῶν [vac.?] μ'.
8	hedera χαῖρε hedera

L. 7: ρῷμ', edd. pr., i.e. 'im Jahr 141(?)'. I believe, however, that M = 40 (years) refers to the age of the dead man.

Thanks to this newly published funerary inscription¹ we have good evidence for contests organized in Hadrianopolis² for Zeus Συργαστος/Συργαστης. Hadrianopolis lies not far from Tios; therefore, this record can only confirm that the main sanctuary of the god was in Tios.

Another form for the epiclesis is revealed by a gloss in Hesychios, s.v. Συργάστωρ συοφορβός, καὶ ὄνομα βαρβαρικόν.³

Moreover, to these numismatic, epigraphic and poor literary testimonies I can add evidence collected from Old Phrygian inscriptions.⁴

In Dd-102, an inscription engraved on a bowl of unknown provenance, possibly from the 7th century BC, the text reads as follows: ← Surgastoy Inas. The interpretation cautiously suggested by the editors of the corpus of Old Phrygian inscriptions supposes a dedication made by an individual to another one: 'apparemment, formule "X, pour Y" avec datif thématique + nominatif sigmatique en -as' (Brixhe – Lejeune 1984: 272). Therefore, the first word of the inscription has been considered as being a personal name (PN).⁵

The first to express doubts about this interpretation was Roberto Gusmani. He already had written a brief note in 1981 on Srkastus in Lydian inscriptions (Gusmani 1980-1981; for Lydian Srkastus, see also Kretschmer 1927: 268; Heubeck 1959: 29, n. 83), where he tried to demonstrate that this PN⁶ was a theophoric name derived from the Hittite-Luwian sarku.⁷ And he concluded: 'si potrebbe allora ritenere che lo Zeus Surgasteios di Tieion conservasse, nella sua epiclesi appropriata per una delle divinità anatoliche che hanno dimora sulle cime dei monti, un elemento linguistico di tradizione ittita, mentre l'antroponimo lidio Srkastus parrebbe da interpretarsi di conseguenza come un nome teoforico, accostato del tipo tematico a quello di Alus, Artimus e così via' (Gusmani 1980-1981: 172)

|72|

¹ Not votive inscription ('Weihinschrift'), as assumed by the editors.

² Rather than 'in der Chora von Hadrianopolis' (edd. pr.).

³ Cf. Radermacher 1926: 160-162, who suggests that the designation of the swineherd (συοφορβός), connected here with the Bithyno-Paphlagonian Συργάστωρ, might be explained by the frequent use of Bithynian and Paphlagonian slaves.

⁴ I will cite the Old Phrygian records after Brixhe – Lejeune 1984.

⁵ Neumann 1988: 14, despite the connection he made with Zeus Συργαστης and Hesychios' gloss. The entry in Zgusta 1964: 477, § 1472, refers to Srkastus in Lydia and, in the steps of Robert 1935: 455 = Robert 1969: 514 (see next note), to the PN Τύργαστος.

⁶ He is inclined to reject the connection made in Robert 1935: 455 = Robert 1969: 514 (who comments on a list of slaves from Chios; see also Robert 1938: 120): 'il me paraît possible que le Τύργαστος de Chios soit un esclave de la côte Sud du Pont-Euxin, qui en fournissait beaucoup, et d'où venait sans doute le Παφλαγωνιδης nommé dans la même liste'. The same list also contains names like Τίβειος, Φρύξ, Μίδας, the first one being doubtless a Paphlagonian, the other ones Phrygians. Therefore, it is certain that slaves from Paphlagonia and Phrygia were well represented on the slave market in Chios. Nevertheless, Roberto Gusmani argues (1980-1981: 25, n. 10): 'mi sembra invece assai più problematico l'accostamento a questo nome divino dell'antroponimo Τύργαστος'. In my opinion Τύργαστος is a Paphlagonian name but not related to Συργαστος.

⁷ See now Tischler 2004: 905-907: 'hervorragend, erhabend, mächtig'.

27). Some years later, soon after the Old Phrygian inscription Dd-102 was published, the same scholar put down his thoughts and pointed out: 'dato che il supporto del testo è un recipiente per libagioni che poteva trovare impiego anche nel culto, bisognerà mettere in conto la possibilità che Surgasto- sia chi teonimo anziché antroponimo: la questione è destinata a rimanere per ora aperta' (Gusmani 1985: 107).

Now, the text of Dd-102 makes a perfect dedication to a divinity: 'Inas (dedicated) to (Zeus) Surgastos' (Bajun – Orel 1988: 137). On the other hand, Old Phrygian inscriptions are known from Bithynia. Therefore, we might imagine that a man called Inas dedicated to this god in an area close to Tios. But an alternative solution is also possible, if not more plausible: we can suppose that Inas made his dedication in Phrygia itself. In this case, we are invited to admit that the cult of Surgastos was widespread in Phrygia since the 7th century BC.

I would also add to this the evidence two graffiti from Gordion. In G-113 (c. 520-500 BC, according to the archaeological context), [-]a(?)stoipitave[-], a likely restoration seems to be dative [Surg]astoi followed by the dedicator's name. The second graffito (G-164) is Hellenistic: [-? -].astoy, perhaps also [Surg]astoy. But even if we discard these attempts to interpret such poor pieces,⁸ we are allowed to admit that Syrgastos (Συργαστος, Συργαστης, Συργαστειος) was a very old divinity with Hittite-Luwian roots worshipped in Phrygia for a long time before its main sanctuary was established at Tieion.

[76] Among the inscriptions listed above, nos. 2-5 come from north-east Phrygia / north-west Galatia and no. 1 from Bithynia. Furthermore, there are apparently not yet published dedications to the same god in the eastern part of the territory of Dorylaion.¹¹ Therefore, north-east Phrygia might have been the mother-country of Zeus Sarnendenos (Mitchell 1993: 23-24; Marek 2000: 132; Marek 2003: 105; Nemeti 2008: 181; Strobel 2009: 133, n. 104; cf. Wollmann 1996: 216, Phrygia or Galatia), from where the cult spread widely to Bithynia and elsewhere. No attested toponym can be connected with this local epithet.¹² Nevertheless, I think that we may be able to identify the element σαρνα/-ε in a PN read as Εὐγεξαρνα (acc.) and possibly also as Εὐγεξαρνᾳ (dat.) in a Neo-Phrygian inscription found at Bayat (south of Nacoleia).¹³ This is surely a compound whose second element would then be -σαρν-. We would, thus, have a supplementary argument for the (north-east)

¹⁰ Contra: Ptolescu 1978: 215, who estimates that Sarnendenos is Phrygian but Sardendenos an Illyrian Zeus.

¹¹ Cf. Marek 2000: 132: „Wie mir Peter Frei mitteilte, findet sich genau dieser Zeusbeiname mehrmals im Gebiet östlich von Dorylaion am Porsuk wieder.“

¹² Zgusta 1984: 544, § 1172: ‘die sprachliche Zugehörigkeit von Σαρνενδ//α// ist unklar’. Ladislav Zgusta also discusses Σαρνενδ//α// (taking into account Anderson’s reading in our inscription no. 2) and Σαρδενδ//α// (with reference to our inscription no. 7): ‘Namen auf Sard- sind in der thrakischen Onymie häufig [...]; folglich ist es wohl besser, den eventuellen Namen Σαρδενδ//α// als einen thrakischen aufzufassen, als in ihm eine graphische Variante des vorangehenden Namens zu sehen.’ But Σαρνενδ- and Σαρδενδ- must be deleted: these ghosts are due either to stone cutters or to false readings (see also Σαρνενδω for Σαρνενδ<γν>ω in our no. 5). Sarnendenos has nothing to do with a supposed Thracian toponym, as assumed in Fernoux 2004: 514.

¹³ Haas 1966: no. 18 (cf. 98-103, § 16/2), ll. 4/5 (Εὐγεξα/ρνᾳ, a reading improved in Lubotsky 1988: 19) and 10 (Εὐγισαρναν).

Phrygian origin of Zeus Sarnendenos.

What is the place of Roman Dacia in this network? As we already have seen, Zeus Syrgastos/Syrgastes is attested outside Asia Minor only in Brixia (Italy) and Dacia, and Zeus Sarnendenos only in Dacia (furthermore, with two instances). The cults of these deities were surely introduced by colonists from Asia Minor after 106 AD.¹⁴ Nevertheless, we have no distinctive traces of a colonisation wave coming from Phrygia. Only one Phrygian individual, mentioned in an inscription dating precisely from AD 218 found in İnönü (territory of Dorylaion) is known for his (possibly rather short) stay in Dacia: after he lived in Dacia and Alexandria(!) (ἐγδημήσας ἐς Δακίαν κὲ Ἀλεξανδρίαν) he came back in his mother-country (ἐς τὴν πατρίδα) and set up an altar dedicated to Zeus Bronton (Ricl 1994: 161-162, no. 8 [SEG 44: 1041]).¹⁵

On the contrary, we have good evidence for colonists arriving in Dacia, notably at Apulum and in the mining district of Alburnus Maior, from Bithynia and Galatia. We know in Apulum of a coll(egium) Pontobithynor(um) which restored a templum about the beginning of Septimius Severus’ reign (IDR III.5 153). The unnamed deity worshipped there was highly likely to have been Zeus Cimistenus, who is attested both by two altars bearing Latin inscriptions of the same city (IOM Cimisteno: IDR III.5 208-209 = Nemeti 2005: 368, nos. 266-267) and by another one with a Greek inscription from Bucium, which lies in the area of Ampelum (Daicoviciu 1937-1940: 301, no. 8 [AE 1944: 20]; Russu 1965, 64-65: no. 24 [SEG 25, 825]; Noeske 1977: 380, no. 13 [SEG 27, 413]; Ruscu 2003: no. 8; Nemeti 2005: 368, no. 268; Carbó García 2010: 954-955, no. 251): Δεὶ Κιμιστηγω). Yet Zeus Kimistenos is a Paphlagonian deity accurately circumscribed to the territory of Hadrianopolis.¹⁶ Some other colonists from Pontus-Bithynia are attested by funerary inscriptions from Ampelum (CIL III 1324 = IDR III.3 342; IDR III.3 341). As for the colonists coming from Galatia, we have evidence particularly for a col(legium) Galatarum in Germisara (CIL III 1394 [ILS 7152] = IDR III.3 234; cf. Ptolescu 1978: 214), the Gal[at] ae consistentes from Napoca (CIL III 860 [ILS 4082]), a dedicator from Apulum (IDR III.5 25), and, furthermore, for several distinctively Galatian epithets for Jupiter (Tauianus, Narenus, Bussumarus, Bussurigius, etc.: Nemeti 2005: 248-252, with references; Falleyev 2007: 64-66, 142-144).

¹⁴ For colonists from Asia Minor in Roman Dacia, see in particular Ptolescu 1978.

¹⁵ Improved readings and dating through the consular pair: Frei 2001: 144-146, no. 5 (SEG 51, 1778).

¹⁶ Marek 1993: 192, no. 14 (dedication Δὶ Κιμιστηγῳ carved into the rock); ibid.: 190-191, no. 6 (statue basis for Emperor Caracalla set up by the δῆμος Κιμιστηγῶν, i.e. by a regional confederation of villagers). In the area of the rock inscription (see also Zgusta 1984: 261-262, § 514), on the Asartepe hill, c. 10 km north-east of Hadrianopolis, a temple has been discovered (Laflı - Christof 2011; Summerer 2014: 200). On the other hand, Strabo 12.3.41 mentions a region called Κιμιστηγή (wrongly emended by several philologists in Coray’s steps to Κιμιστηγή), which must in fact, as we learn from inscriptions, be Κιμιστηγή (Marek 1993: 122-124, with exhaustive discussion and topographic details). Moreover, the PN Κιμιστός (hapax) occurs in a recently published inscription from the same Caesarea/Hadrianopolis (Laflı - Christof 2012: no. 33, ll. 2/3).

Now, the altar dedicated to Zeus Sarnendenos in the mining district of Alburnus Maior belongs to a unitary series consisting of four similar pieces of about the same dimensions and decoration, all of them bearing Greek inscriptions, which is obviously remarkable in the latinophone Dacia. The other altars are dedicated to Zeus Ναργηνος (two monuments: Daicoviciu 1937-1940: 302-303, nos. 2 and 4 [AE 1944: 23 and 25]; Russu 1965: 68-69, nos. 28-29 [SEG 25: 828-829]; Noeske 1977: 380-381, nos. 15-16 [SEG 27: 413]); IDR III.3 398-399 [Ruscu 2003: nos. 3-4; Nemeti 2005: 369-370, nos. 277-278]) and Zeus Σιττακωμικος (Daicoviciu 1937-1940: 303, no. 5 [AE 1944: 26]; Russu 1965: 70, no. 31 [SEG 25: 831]; Noeske 1977: 381, no. 17 [SEG 27: 413]); IDR III.3 409 [Ruscu 2003: no. 7; Nemeti 2005: 370, no. 281]). The epiclesis Σιττακομικος, equally derived from a local ‘demotic’, is a hapax,¹⁷ but Zeus Narenus is well known in north-west Galatia (Mitchell 1982: nos. 11, 12, 42, 53, 67, 70, 86, all of them from the area of Mihalicçik; cf. Zgusta 1984: 420, § 885-1). Furthermore, Zeus Narenus is not attested outside his home country and Dacia, where beside the two Greek inscribed altars we also know of another one, from the territory of the same Apulum (village of Berghin), bearing a Latin inscription: [I(oui)] O(ptimo) M(aximo) / [Deo N]areno (IDR III.4 41 [AE 1988, 951]). Thus, there is little doubt that all these colonists from Alburnus Maior came from north-east Phrygia / north-west Galatia, perhaps more precisely from the area of Mihalicçik.

[78] The worshippers of Zeus Syrgastos from Apulum or their ancestors came from Bithymia, very probably from the area of Tios/Hadrianopolis.¹⁸ But as we can see, Bithynian and Galatian colonists worshipped beside their ‘national’ deities gods of Phrygian origin: the very old Zeus Syrgastos and the apparently more recent Zeus Sarnendenos.¹⁹

¹⁷ Cf. Zgusta 1984: 577, § 1229: from *Σιττακώμη. ‘Ich würde vorziehen, die häufigen thrakischen Namen wie Σιττας [...] mit dem Vorderglied zu vergleichen.’ But the West (?) Thracian PN Sita, Σιτας, Σειτας never occurs with double consonant (while the alternation i/e might prove that /i/ was long): see the testimonies collected in Dana 2014: 324-325. A parallel may be rather tried with the Ionic PN Σιττας attested in Colophon (five entries in LGPN V.A). The second element, -κωμικός, is really disturbing: one would have expected -κωμήτης.

¹⁸ Compare with the dedication from Brixia (see above), where Zeus Surgasteus seems to be associated (if the interpretation of the editors is correct) with the local hero of the Bithynian city.
