

Ethical Principles and Publication Policy

Following the policy of confidentiality and impartiality, especially the editor, assistant editors, editorial and advisory boards, end readers, referees, authors, and other journal employees, who are involved in all stages of the process of uploading the work, which is the initial stage of the publication process, to the journal page and publishing in the issues. Should act within the framework of ethical rules. From this point of view, everyone involved in the process, from preparing the literature study to the publication of the study in the journal issue, is expected to comply with the following ethical principles.

The directive on ethical principles below has been prepared regarding the guidelines and policies published by COPE. For detailed information, you can visit <https://publicationethics.org/guidance/Guidelines>.

Editors / Assistant Editors / Issue Editors Responsibilities

- Research Journal of Politics, Economics and Management, Editors, Assistant Editors, Issue Editors have the right to check the review of articles and other studies regarding their compliance with the journal's policy, purpose, and scope completely and accurately before the article evaluation process.
- Journal of Politics, Economics and Management Studies, Editors, Assistant Editors, Issue Editors must take precautions against necessary unethical behaviors, especially intellectual property rights.
- Journal of Politics, Economics and Management Studies, Editors, Assistant Editors, Issue Editors, in case of a negative decision, must notify the author in writing, with a reasoned letter, taking into account the original value, method, purpose, and scope of the study, and its contribution to the field.
- Editors, Assistant Editors, Issue Editors should not have a conflict of interest regarding accepted or rejected works or author(s).
- Editors, Assistant Editors, Issue Editors are obliged to protect the personal information of authors and referees within the scope of ethical principles.
- Editors, Assistant Editors, Issue Editors must comply with the impartiality rule in the article evaluation process. It should prevent the referrals of referees and other people involved in the publication process. Ensure timely completion of the evaluation process.
- Editors, Assistant Editors, Issue Editors send their work to two referees who have at least one study in the evaluation process related to their fields of expertise and study subject.
- The editor has full authority to determine the referees who will evaluate the studies. It is authorized to make the final decision regarding the studies.
- Editors and other publisher bodies are obliged to examine whether the studies contain plagiarism, data fraud, or manipulated citations and inform the necessary institutions or organizations about the relevant authors, when necessary, considering the suggestions or evaluations of the referees. Responsibility for damages and compensations arising from negativities that may arise belongs to the author(s).
- Editors, Assistant Editors, Issue Editors should determine whether the studies have plagiarism problems during the pre-check and inform the authors.
- When the editors and editorial board deem it necessary, they should check whether the necessary corrections requested by the referees are measured and appropriate and whether the desired corrections have been made.

Referees Responsibilities

- After the preliminary evaluation of the studies, the opinions of the referees are prioritized.
- If the referees cannot evaluate the studies sent to them promptly or think it is more appropriate to evaluate the study subject by another referee, they should inform the editor immediately.
- The referees should evaluate the studies impartially and impartially.
- The referees should not share the data of the evaluated studies with third parties in any way. The responsibility arising from this situation belongs to the referee.
- Reviewers should evaluate the studies objectively. While making assessments, they should be constructive and destroy the relevant file during the assessment process.
- During the evaluation phase, the referees are responsible for whether the studies are within the scope of the appropriate methodology, and otherwise, they are responsible for recommending the appropriate method. They should criticize their work in a moderately constructive manner and avoid condescending and insulting criticism.
- The referees must do the evaluation process within the evaluation period given to their cats.
- If the referees deem it necessary, they have the right to request citations from various other studies to increase the study's quality. However, in this case, in terms of necessity and proportionality, the evaluation of the requests of the referees belongs to the editor.

Authors Responsibilities

- Studies should be original and contribute to the literature.
- Authors should pay attention to spelling rules, citation, and bibliography in their works.
- Responsibility for plagiarism belongs to the author(s). In case of damage related to plagiarism, the necessary compensations belong to the author(s).
- Studies can only be withdrawn, provided that they are notified to the editor and editorial board before the referee evaluation.
- In their works, the authors do not use language, religion, race, gender, sect, age, political thought, etc. should not use any discriminatory language such as
- Authors should make their evaluations and suggestions in their studies with objectivity and academic ethics.
- The names of third parties who do not contribute to the studies should not be written as authors.
- After the studies are included in the evaluation process, any missing information about the authors should be completed, but no request should be made to add or remove any authors.
- If the studies are articles published in scientific meetings or theses, they should be indicated as footnotes on the study's first page.
- If the referees request data and information during the evaluation process of the study, the necessary information should be conveyed to the relevant persons through the editors. The authors should immediately contact the Editorial Office of the Journal of Politics, Economics, and Management Research when they deem it necessary to make changes in the evaluation process or the studies published.
- Studies in the sliced form are not accepted by the Journal of Politics, Economics, and Management Studies (SEYAD). Authors should not prepare a sliced study and should not be sent to different journals for evaluation in parallel.
- During the evaluation phase, if the author(s) realizes that there is a mistake with their work, they should immediately contact the editor. Damages arising from the results revealed by fabricated data belong to the authors.